Tips to learn French with TV series Now that you have an interesting series list to watch, you will need a plan to deal with them. Here are some popcorn and settle in: Be aware of that. A series of crimes will have a different vocabulary from a historical series set in the 19th century, so consider your level of French competence. If you are not so sure, practice first with modern series talking about everyday topics, then feel free to get adventurous after that. Experiment with subtitles. Try to turn off the subtitles first and see if you can get the gist of history only by listening. French is known for its difficult pronunciation, so if you're confusing or want to take an unfamiliar word, turn on the subtitles. Keep other study resources around. You will have to have a good dictionary app or a website while watching (new words can accumulate quickly!). Fluent U is available both on the web and on the mobile. Why learn French through TV series? Let's face it. French is not an easy language to learn for beginners, especially because of its pronunciation and complex grammatical rules. Looking at French TV shows, you can collect pronunciation of French words and increase vocabulary as well. You will also get in direct contact with how French sounds when used by native speakers in many situations, which will help you get conversation faster and easily. Another advantage would be motivation. The French TV series above are not dry at all (considering that you will use them as a study material), and it becomes more comfortable to watch how you burn through episodes because they get used to vocabulary. So there is - a huge 23 shows to learn French, along with some ideas to start. Learning French with native media is one of the most efficient and effective ways to master a language. Native programs open a window to real conversations and interactions that would be to listen elsewhere unless you go abroad. Try our proposals and you will be a more step close to becoming fluent.
